

Dear Parent / Carer,

Ongoing Wider Reopening of School: Update

Earlier this month I wrote to you outlining our plans for the wider re-opening of school by offering in school-supervision alongside remote learning.

At that time our guidance to parents was students should, wherever possible, continue to learn from home.

Since then the government has made a variety of announcements around further easing of restrictions from July 4th. Please note that the guidance to schools from the Department for Education remains unchanged (for the time being!). Schools still have to operate under two metre social distancing measures as well as implementing a wide range of other health and safety strategies.

However, the in-school supervision we have offered has proved popular and successful – more than a hundred students attended during the first week, where they were kept safe and supported by their Form Tutor to stay on track or to catch-up with work they may have struggled to complete.

With this in mind, Governors agreed today to change our guidance to parents, which is now:

“Students should, wherever possible, attend school when invited to do so.”

Later today, all parents of students in Year 10 and 12 who have not attended a day in-school will be sent a text with an invite for them to attend. Parents can confirm this by visiting either:

Thank you for the enormous amount of support and positive feedback we have received during this challenging time. It is very much appreciated.

As ever, when and if the government issues further guidance we will keep parents updated with any further plans we have.

Your faithfully,

Alun Harding
